Manager's Commentary

We apologise for the somewhat tardy despatch of our monthly musings but trust that you, like we, have had an enjoyable summer (or winter for our antipodean reader) unblemished by our feeling the need to bother you once again after our early July food piece. Said missive turned out to be somewhat perspicacious (if we say so ourselves); those who listened to our advice in full (including us) bought the day after the index bottomed. We thank you for your faith, which we hope will be handsomely rewarded.

As to where we go now; the trade war of words seems to be moving to the contemplative stage after the almost Churchillian bombast of the Chinese leadership's "we will never surrender" last week, although recent suggestions that more harm will be done to the US than the Chinese economy as a consequence of escalation may have had as much influence as some phantom pain in the bone spurs. That being the case, and with meetings not due to take place until November, we may have a 3-month window to focus on the local positives. A VNI close above 1,000 should confirm that.
